Background

The client is a specialised medical clinic offering support to vulnerable members of society. Operating across the whole country, the client has numerous patient records and files to share between the medical staff.

Challenge

Many of the patients at the clinic require specialist care from several different doctors and consultants, which creates a problem with collaborating on paper records. Doctors require previous consultancy notes and medical history when working with patients and not having this information readily to hand was costing time and money.

Solution

With the help of ScannerVision™ the client was able to roll out a new, electronic document capture system to all 50 multifunctional devices in the organisation.

After each consultation, doctors can scan their notes to the ORACLE database system, tagged with the specific meta data for each individual patient. Referrals, medications and other patient information can also be tracked in this way, giving each consultant a full picture of a patients course of treatment, right from their own computer desktop.

ScannerVision™ has a in-built authentication and user management system ensures that only authorised staff are able to scan and retrieve confidential patient information. And thanks to the Optical Character Recognition (OCR) and Intelligent Character Recognition (ICR) technologies in ScannerVision™, this information is searchable, ensuring the critical data is available on demand.

Benefits

By spending less time hunting down patient records and historical information, the doctors are able to spend much more time seeing patients, thereby increasing productivity. The client estimates that savings in efficiency and costs associated with document handling amount to $150,000 per year after the implementation of their ScannerVision™ document workflow.
